FBAR Penalty Defense Attorney Helps Taxpayers Resolve Reporting Penalties

Princeton, New Jersey — For U.S. taxpayers with foreign bank accounts, few IRS issues cause as much anxiety as an FBAR violation. The Foreign Bank Account Report, required annually for anyone with foreign financial accounts exceeding $10,000 in aggregate value, comes with penalties that can escalate quickly when filings are missed or incomplete. Verni Tax Law, led by Attorney Anthony N. Verni, is helping individuals and business owners navigate these disclosures and push back against penalties that often exceed what the underlying violation actually warrants.

Many taxpayers facing FBAR trouble never intended to hide anything. They simply didn't know the reporting requirement existed, or they assumed their foreign bank or financial advisor was handling it. Unfortunately, the IRS doesn't distinguish easily between honest oversight and willful concealment without a proper case being made and that's where a FBAR penalty defense attorney becomes essential. Anthony Verni, who holds credentials as an Attorney, CPA, and MBA, brings more than 25 years of experience to these matters, working directly with clients to build the factual record needed to argue for reduced or waived penalties.

As a FBAR compliance attorney, Verni starts by reviewing a client's full financial picture every foreign account, business interest, and prior filing history before recommending a path forward. In many cases, taxpayers qualify for the Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures, which allow non-willful violators to come into compliance with reduced penalty exposure. In other cases, particularly where the IRS has already opened an examination, a more defensive posture is required. Having represented clients through the Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program since 2009, Verni understands how IRS examiners evaluate willfulness and where the strongest arguments for penalty mitigation typically lie.

What sets Verni Tax Law apart is the direct, personal handling of every case. As a FBAR tax attorney, Verni does not hand cases off to junior staff or paralegals. He personally reviews the financial documentation, communicates with the IRS on the client's behalf, and develops a strategy tailored to the client's specific risk profile whether that client is a U.S. resident, a dual national, or an expatriate living overseas. Clients have consistently noted his ability to explain complicated tax procedures in plain language and to negotiate outcomes that protect both their finances and their peace of mind.

The firm's international reach reflects the scope of the problem. Verni has represented clients across dozens of countries, including the Philippines, Japan, Germany, and the United Kingdom, many of whom discovered their reporting obligations only after receiving a notice from the IRS. As a foreign bank account reporting lawyer, he offers flexible consultation scheduling including early mornings, evenings, and weekends along with secure video conferencing, so that time zones and geography never stand between a taxpayer and proper representation.

With FATCA data-sharing agreements now connecting the IRS to financial institutions in nearly every country, voluntary compliance has become more important than ever. Taxpayers who wait for an IRS notice before addressing unfiled FBARs typically face steeper penalties and fewer options.

Verni Tax Law offers confidential initial consultations for taxpayers concerned about past or ongoing FBAR reporting issues.
